Background

OWH was established in 1991 in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health, within the Office of the Secretary. Its mission is to improve the health of American women by advancing and coordinating a comprehensive women's health agenda throughout the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). The HHS Office on Women's Health is the government's champion and primary agent for women's health issues, working to redress inequities in research, health care services, and education that have historically placed the health of women at risk. OWH is the Department's focal point for ensuring that women's health policy, practice, and research are mutually informed and effectively integrated within HHS. OWH accomplishes this by collaborating with other federal and non-federal partners on behalf of women and girls. OWH provides leadership to promote equity for women and girls through sex and gender specific approaches.

OWH has staff located in Washington, D.C., and a network of Regional Women's Health Coordinators (RWHCs) located in each of the ten federal regions. The RWHCs coordinate and implement national public health initiatives to promote a greater focus on women's health issues at the regional, state, and local levels. The RWHCs advance the mission of the OWH by administering programs that improve the health of women in communities across the country and by coordinating activities in health care service delivery, research, and public and health professional education. Sensitivity to local, state, and regional needs in women's health is reflected in their work to identify priority health areas, to establish networking relationships, and to implement initiatives addressing regional women's health concerns. For additional information about the RWHCs and the regional offices, please visit <http://www.womenshealth.gov/about-us/who-we-are/regional-offices/#role>.

As part of its strategic plan, OWH continues to fund evidence-based interventions to address gaps in women's health that are not addressed at the national level by any other public or private entity. These interventions focus on health disparities in women's health in which minority status, disabilities, geography, family history, sexual orientation, low socioeconomic status, chronic conditions, and infectious diseases are contributing risk factors.

OWH contracted with John Snow, Inc. (JSI) to provide general program support to the Central Office and ten Regional Offices on Women's Health to manage regional health projects and activities in women's health in the ten HHS regions. Therefore, JSI is lead contractor for administration of this RFP.

D. Focus Area

Violence against women and girls is perpetrated in all types of personal, professional and family relationships and crosses economic, educational, cultural, racial, age, and religious lines. The United States Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) estimated that nearly one-third of women murdered each year in the United States are killed by their current or former intimate partners.¹ BJS also reported that approximately one million women are stalked each year², and three percent of college women are victims of an attempted or completed rape in each academic year.³

Research findings recognize trauma as a crosscutting, gender-specific issue that has significant adverse effects on the health and wellbeing of women and girls. Violence against women and girls is a major form of trauma which encompasses intimate partner violence, domestic violence, sexual assault, sexual abuse, stalking, emotional and verbal abuse; as well as bullying, human-trafficking, and other forms of trauma or abuse. Violence affecting women and girls can take place in many settings including at home, at school, and in the workplace.

This funding opportunity addresses the physical, mental, and emotional impact of violence against women across the life span (i.e. girls, adolescent girls, women of reproductive age, pregnant women, mature women, and older women). Funding is available for specific events or activities intended to prevent, raise awareness of, and/or respond to the epidemic of violence against women and girls in the United States.

Proposals for funding may include activities for such as: the development and implementation of organizational policies regarding screening for violence in health care settings; the development of organizational practices to provide trauma-informed care to promote recovery and resiliency from violence and trauma; and outreach to workplaces and religious institutions on how they can adopt policies that address violence and ensure the safety of women and girls. Other activities may include VAW prevention workshops for women and girls; local public health awareness projects; VAW specific health fairs; and projects that engage men and boys in violence against women and girls prevention programs. Agencies are encouraged to be creative in promoting these prevention programs to include males.

Multiple federal websites are available that provide information, fact sheets, materials, templates and programming ideas regarding VAW as well as links to policies and legislation. You can access them at <http://www.womenshealth.gov/violence-against-women/government-in-action/index.html#about>.
