

Communication Considerations for

People with Disabilities

You may encounter a victim that has difficulty communicating effectively without a device or some sort of assistance. There are several options for you to pursue to attempt to make communication easier for your victim.

1. Contact the case manager for the victim to determine what type of assistance he/she may provide in enabling effective communication. The case manager may respond to your location to support your efforts.

2. There is a state contact that could be a resource for communication considerations. Her information is below:

3. ARC agencies exist around the state. They are advocates for people with disabilities and would be a great contact for determining the best resource for communication depending on the disability. A comprehensive list is included.
